The previous letters were written by the Assistant Director who was the Acting Director during this time period. The new director is apparently a 19th Century history enthusiast. Our Archaeologist said that if they do what she is asking they will document that the inhabitants of the farmstead used bottles and utensils and reveal nothing that will cause the site to reach a level of significance to require preservation.

Should we have him write a diplomatic letter to that effect for the file? Are you confident we can essentially ignore this request, Beth?
